

---

Subject: Grille cleaning

Posted by voided3 on Mon, 16 Aug 2004 16:49:52 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Hello. As some of you may know already, if you have saw my other post in here about chrome port finishes, I have a 2x15 Jensen cab that was in a smokey environment. In addition to the ports being yellowed a little, the grille has turned a little brownish in some areas. The same problems are on my friend's 2x15 bass cabs, but a little worse. The brown seemed to make a ring around where the speaker is in the grille and along the edges. Is it possible to clean this without disassembling the cabinet (i wouldn't mind taking off the ports or the logo to do it though)? Is it just fading (though i doubt it since my friend's cab's were stored in a basement for years)? Thanks!

---

---

Subject: Re: Grille cleaning

Posted by QModer on Tue, 17 Aug 2004 07:24:04 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

I have used old english on my black grill clothes.

---

---

Subject: Re: Grille cleaning

Posted by voided3 on Wed, 18 Aug 2004 07:00:32 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Hello. The old english worked suprisingly well and now my cabinets smell of clean floors haha. Thanks!

---

---

Subject: Re: Grille cleaning

Posted by QModer on Thu, 19 Aug 2004 02:59:07 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Glad it worked for you. It makes my old Leslie look young again too LOL..

---

---

Subject: Re: Grille cleaning

Posted by Virgil on Fri, 08 Jul 2011 07:07:20 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

The brown seemed to make a ring around where the speaker is in the grille and along the edges. Is it possible to clean this without disassembling the cabinet (i wouldn't mind taking off the ports or the logo to do it though)?

---