Astounding! I didn't really see in the description, but is he only willing to sell the whole collection, or is he willing to sell individual pieces?

Is he a member of this group?

Those are Brent Ware's amps. He put that group together about five years ago. I have been there....seen it...it is awesome! Some of those amps came from Dan, JC, Pleat, Deb and a few from me. I am sure there are others who sold amps to him from our group, but I am either unaware or I have forgotten. He generously offered to allow us to come there for a Kustom gathering....but I could never generate enough interest to get it done. The large Kustom Kat he is selling is the red sparkle that some of us saw in Indianapolis in 2001. It matches the description of the one Bud Ross said "disappeared" at a NAMM show back in the day. yep....looks like Brent is finally coughin it up..a shame cause it was a fantasy room that he created...his whole studio facility is.

I wish him well, but i think we'll see the stuff get seperated at some point..aside from a Hard rock or some big biz that can afford it.. I can't imagine anyone being able to plunk down the cash in these financially difficult times.

He has a couple pieces I wouldn't mind owning fer sure.

Why won't he offer them up to the group? $70,000 ain't going anywhere.

I called my cuz Sherry...she said she's too busy chasin her next boyfriend to worry about amps and touring..but seriously..Brent should contact the good folks at Hard Rock Cafe..they could cut a check and then disperse the amps across the various locations.
i know it would brighten my day when I go into one of those places and endure the "quality" food...at least I'd have a kustom to look at.

yeah those are awesome pics but i don't know if $70,000 is the right price and how many people could actually afford that? he does say if they don't sell on auction he'll start selling them individually
